"A monumental work..."

John A. Hanson
".... Unfurlingly entertaining, jolly and judicious, littered with incidents worth reading out loud."

Alexander Black
"... A dazzling three-ring circus in two volumes."
—Harry Hansen, N. Y. World

It tells—how the screen discovered sex....

how H G Wells stimulated the early development of the movies....

how censorship started—and why....

how the movies got Will Hays—the inside story....

how the yearning and dreams of forty million people are developing a new art-form.

how the late Czar of Russia was almost lured to Hollywood—salary no object—by a film millionaire who still recalled the pogroms of Kiev....

how Charlie Chaplin celebrated the signing of his famous $670,000 contract by an orgy—of necktie-buying!....

how it came that Adolph Zukor offered Lewis J. Selznick $5000 a week to go to China—and stay there....

—and a million and one other authentic and exciting facts about the amazing and colorful motion picture industry.

TWO delightfully illustrated books that have come to us recently are A. S. Turberville's illustrated introduction to the eighteenth century, put forth by the Clarendon Press and entitled "English Men and Manners in the Eighteenth Century," and "A Mid-Century Child and Her Books," by Caroline M. Hewins (Macmillan). Mr. Turberville considers the illustrations to his own volume fully as important as the letterpress, and they are admirably chosen. The book as a whole is manufactured with the impeccable taste common to Oxford publications. The smaller book, "A Mid-Century Child," bears a lavender binding stamped in gold in delightful imitation of the decorations common to mid-nineteenth century books. The illustrations are culled from such books as "Snow-Berries, A Book for Young Folks, (1867)," "Friendship's Offering (1835)," "The Token (1830)," "Marmaduke Multiply," "Youth's Keepsake," "Grandma's Book of Rhymes for the Nursery," and so on. There are some delightful plates in color and Anne Carroll Moore has written an introduction....

Sig Spaeth—or Dr. Spaeth, which title does not do justice to this wit of the musical world,—has just burst upon the market with two books, either of which—if you have any tunefulness in you—should delight you. There is "Words and Music," a book of burlesques (Simon & Schuster) and "Read 'Em and Weep," the Songs You Forgot to Remember (Doubleday, Page). Spaeth, in the former, presents his famous parodies familiar to his lecture audiences and those who have heard him over the radio. But here at last are the words and music you couldn't remember for laughing. "Read 'Em and Weep" is the result of con amore research into old songs of sentiment, melodrama, and ribaldry, for the reader as well as for the amateur performer. It plucks priceless pearls of popular vocalization from the past....

We hear that next year Houghton Mifflin will publish a book on old New England tombstones, by Esther Forbes, who wrote "O, Genteel Lady." Miss Forbes has spent about twenty years in cemetarial investigation....

The young Nathalia Crane's new book of poems, "The Singing Crow" (Albert and Charles Boni), is dedicated to the poet, Virginia Moore, author of "Not Poppy." Miss Crane's book is plentifully decorated by Mac Harshberger. This thirteen-year-old child poet is a mystery among children. Many of her newer poems seem obscure to us, though often there is unusual insight in the expression, a feeling for words fantastically brilliant. These four verses from "The Dust," for instance, seem to us remarkable:

*Under the microscope all seems sincere;
There is a hillside, a valley, a weir.*

*There are diameters posing as fens,
There are the Apennines—under the lens.*

*Spread on a slide is the great Gobi Plain;
Carthage and Nineveh rise from a stain.*

*Laid out in atoms of amber and rust,
Surely an angel arranges the dust.*

Again, "Experiments" is extraordinary in compressing a grisly fancy into a quatrain, as well as in its phrasing:

*There is a weird for every empty shell,
A hant resides where once the orchid fell;
And in collapsing chancels of the mole,
A shambling ghost still plays his eyeless rôle.*

In the title poem and in "A Singer Gone," we do not quite understand about "the daughter of the Hood" among "the lords in black." There is some superb concise phrasing in the former, though the full meaning of the poem is not at all clear....

It is still not too late to get your answer in for the five hundred dollars the firm of Boni and Liveright is offering for an essay on the question (anent Dreiser's "An American Tragedy") "Was Clyde Griffiths guilty of Roberta Alden's death and therefore subject to the penalty of capital punishment for first degree murder?" The judges of this contest are Arthur Garfield Hays (who was in charge of the defense at the Scopes trial in Tennessee last year), Bishop William Montgomery Brown (Formerly Bishop of Arkansas and excommunicated for heresy last year), and Heywood Brown. Manuscripts must be typewritten double space and on one side of the sheet only. They must be submitted, together with all inquiries, to Donald S. Friede, 61 West 48th Street, New York City, before December 31, 1926. No manuscripts bearing a postmark later than midnight December 30th will be considered. Boni and Liveright will publish the best of the essays in book form and pay a royalty of fifteen per cent, to be divided equally among all the contestants whose essays are included....

Our own May Lambertson Becker, whose address is 126 West 85th Street, announces "Studies in Contemporary Literature: A Series of Lectures," for 1926-27. There are twenty lectures in all, including a review of novels of the season, a study of character in biography, one on the Irish Theatre, one on Eugene O'Neill, on the stage in London, a year's British fiction, the bond of Poetry, and so on. Mrs. Becker will suggest reading-lists on any of these subjects through her department in this Review, "The Reader's Guide."...

Genevieve Taggard, well-known American poet, and author of "For Eager Lovers," "Hawaiian Hilltop," and the most recent "Words for the Chisel" (Knopf), is announced by William B. Feakins for a series of lectures with readings from her poems. Miss Taggard is a charming speaker....

The radio station of The Chicago Daily News, W. M. A. Q., in collaboration with Northwestern University, is presenting a course of Radio Lectures on "The New Universe," the modern worlds of science, society, art, religion, philosophy, and their relations to each other. They invite all and sundry to tune in every Wednesday at 8:10 P. M. There will be twenty-eight lectures in all. They began on October 20th. Students may register for the course subject to a fee of five dollars charged for handling the papers....

So far as we know, The Society of Woman Geographers is the only woman's organization of the kind in existence. It was organized in 1925, by a group who felt that there should be some medium of contact between women distinguished in geographical work and its allied sciences. Its Associate Membership admits widely travelled women who are interested in furthering all forms of exploration. Among active or corresponding members of the society are such writers as Mary Austin, Florence Ayscough, Stella Benson, Helen Churchill Candee, Rose Wilder Lane, Jean Mackenzie, Blair Niles, Annie S. Peck, and Grace Thompson Seton....

The "Ivory Tower" tea room, 23 Minnetta Lane, Greenwich Village, has just opened. It is a quiet rendezvous for the cultivated, with Louise Lafitte, the hostess, and is open at seven P. M....

Bob Linscott of Houghton, Mifflin, and Conrad Aiken recently sailed for England. They were to be a week in London and then a week at Conrad's home in Rye. Then Linscott was to go to Paris to visit Archibald MacLeish, whose "Streets in the Moon" Houghton Mifflin is just publishing in a limited edition of five hundred copies at five dollars per. Aiken has been here for the last two months working on a novel and an anthology of poetry and a number of reviews....

The Viking Press are arranging to publish next Spring a new story by Sylvia Townsend Warner, the author of "Lolly Willowses." Its central character is said to be a South Sea missionary....

Margaret Wilson, author of "The Able McLaughlins," and the more recent "The Painted Room," has been living in England since marrying an Oxford professor. Now she is in this country on a short visit. She will return to England to live in the shadow of the historical old Wormwood Scrubs prison in London, inasmuch as her husband has been appointed Deputy Governor of the prison....

Justin Sturm played full-back and end at Yale and was a star of the Yale-Princeton game in 1921. His name is well-known to sport writers and sport fans. But he has bewildered some of his athletic friends by writing "The Bad Samaritan," a novel lately published by Harpers....

We have received several full versions of the ancient and honorable ballad of Abdullah Bulbul Ameer, since our mention of Christopher Wren's mention of it. B. G. E., Edith S. Mitchell, of La Grange, Illinois, and Benjamin P. Bowland, of Cleveland Heights, Cleveland, Ohio, write us about it. One of these days when we have more space we are going to print the full version with variant readings....

Farewell! (as Byron said), a word that must be, and hath been, a sound which makes us linger;—yet—farewell!

LAFCADIO HEARN

His birth is surrounded by considerable mystery, though his father is known to have been a soldiering Irishman and his mother a Greek.

At 19 he came to America, finally taking up journalistic work in New Orleans. This city fascinated him, and some of his finest early work was done under its spell.

During these years Hearn was continually pressed for money; he was often forced to take menial employment, and to sleep in deserted alleys.

Filled with enthusiasm over the perusal of certain books on Japan, he went to this country under contract with Harpers to write a number of sketches of Japanese life.

Shortly after his arrival, he severed connections with this firm, and became an Instructor of English at the University of Tokio.

He married a Japanese and, after the birth of his son, became a citizen of Japan.

His work was his religion; it obsessed him; it made him both happy and miserable. When forced by circumstances to take up occupations which interfered with it, he became bitterly resentful.

His task was the interpretation of the contrasting civilization of East and West, and to this purpose he made a thorough study of the Japanese language.

His unfortunate temperament made happiness impossible; partial blindness and poverty added to his misfortune.

His writings, full of strangeness and beauty, are proof that a man may rise above ill-fortune through devotion to his art.

A JUST TRIBUTE

MISS FLORA M. LAMB, who directs the publication of "The Mosher Books," has just issued a second collection of prose and verse chosen by the editor of The Bibelot entitled "Amphora," a companion volume to a collection of the same name published in 1912. This volume was partially planned by Mr. Mosher but he did not live to complete them. In addition to selections which he had included in his catalogues from 1912 to 1923, this is really a memorial volume, containing essays and poems by Mr. Mosher, a sonnet, "October in Memory of Thomas Bird Mosher" by Thomas S. Jones, Jr.; a dedication "To Thomas Bird Mosher" by Spencer Miller, Jr.; a "Foreword" by John L. Foley; a tribute, "A Golden String," contributed by Christopher Morley to The Saturday Review, July 11, 1925, and a pen portrait of Mr. Mosher entitled "Aldi Discipulus Americanus," contributed by Frederick A. Pottle to The Literary Review, December 29, 1923, both reprinted here. The frontispiece is an admirable portrait of the Portland publisher. The dedication is a just and well-phrased tribute:

"The law of excellence and the law of democracy stand in apparent confictions one with another in our modern age. They seem outwardly to have little in common. Yet Thomas Bird Mosher resolved this conflict through a sharing of enduring prose and poetry with his fellowmen. It was his gift to know what was excellent; it was his passion to share this excellence as widely as possible; it was his destiny to attain the realization of his ideal. He linked beauty which is ageless in art with the desire for the best which is timeless in the spirit of man.

"His place among great American publishers is secure. This position he made unique through his unerring genius in selecting those things of established worth which are 'a lasting expression in words of the meaning of life,' and in sending forth each piece of literature in a manner appropriate to the nature of the work itself. Every volume was printed from hand-set type on hand-made paper and was hand-bound in paper boards. The human hand runs through all his work—a symbol of the human touch of mankind.

"When we shall view the fullness of his achievement in an historical perspective, we shall regard it with an increasing admiration. For he has done what all fine artists seek to do—to increase truth and beauty in the world. His quest of this ideal will be the measure of his own inheritance in the memory of men."
